RANGE ROVER PHEV

Range Rover's New Plug-in Hybrid Electric Vehicle (PHEV), is new and improved at 23 Model Year with several key advantages over the outgoing model and its competition:

More Power

The new PHEV engine combines the 3.0l 6-cylinder Ingenium petrol combustion engine (ICE) producing 395HP with a 105kW electric motor to deliver a combined 434HP – an overall improvement of 39 HP. See technical specifications chart for additional detail on engine performance.

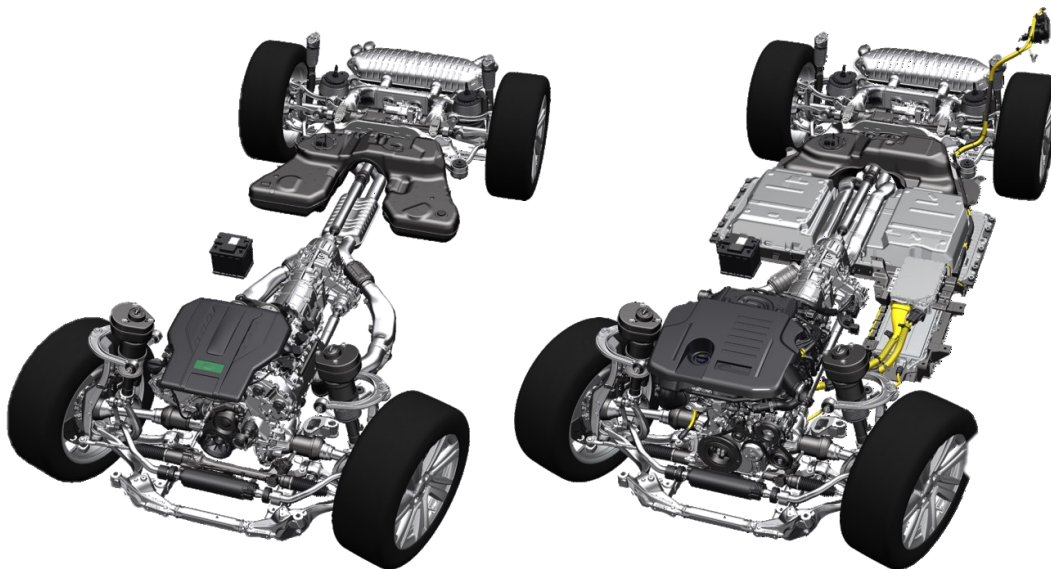

Faster Charge Time

Range Rover PHEV is one of the very few PHEVs available today with 50kW DC charging capability, and is therefore one of the fastest PHEVs to charge. It can charge up to 6 times faster than competitors, when comparing its 50kW DC rapid charging capability to competitors limited to 7.2kW AC. It has the capability to rapid charge 0-80% in under 1 hour (using a DC 50kW charger).

Better Battery Placement

MLA-Flex Platform for Range Rover has been engineered with cabin occupant space in mind on EV platforms. As such, the High Voltage Battery installed in the PHEV is packaged within the wheelbase of the vehicle, directly underneath the cabin. This is an improvement over prior generation as it eliminates the need to compromise the load space, also allowing the fitment of a full-size spare wheel.

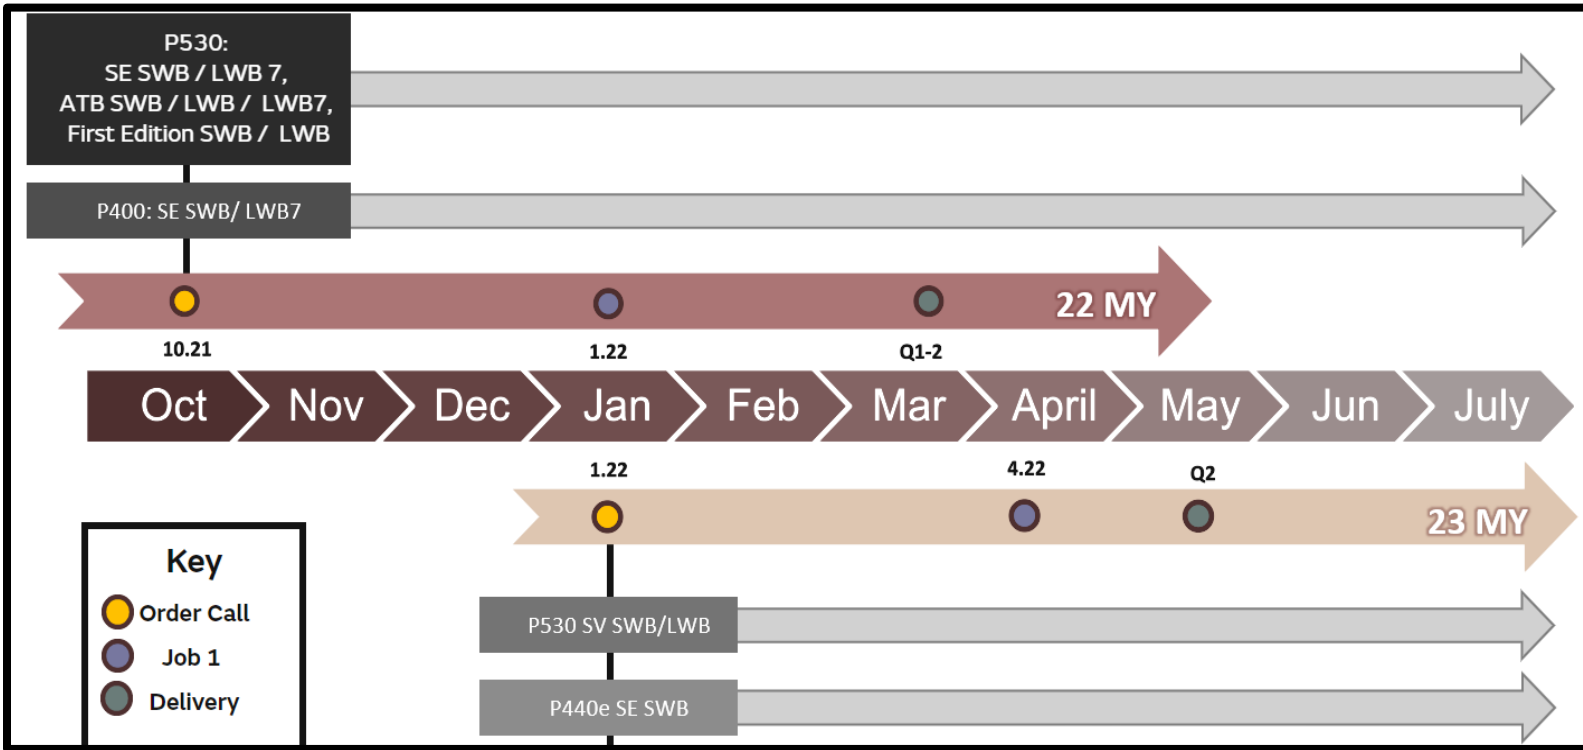

ICE Engine
Hybrid

Plug-in

Extended EV Only Range

The new PHEV boasts a preliminary pure EV Range estimated at 48 miles; a significant improvement in zero emissions driving capability and strong selling proposition for the eco-minded buyer considering an electrified powertrain.
